Not so long ago, residents of the Upstate thought only the Lowcountry was full of ghosts and hauntings. John Boyanoski's 2006 collection of Upstate ghost stories changed that, and now he is back with More Ghosts of Upstate South Carolina. From a haunted former hospital to the historical witches of Fairfield County to the many ghosts of Winthrop University's Tillman Hall, Boyanoski's collection wanders the back roads and back hallways of the Upstate to tell the stories of a truly haunted region.

Haunted houses are scattered throughout, some still lived in and some abandoned long ago. Boyanoski tells stories of a skeleton in a window, haunted railroad tracks in Spartanburg, a shadow no longer attached to its owner, a ghost that played with the family dog, and the many ghosts of a Main Street Greenville art studio, including one Civil War soldier who held his bayonet to the artist's throat.

Greenville, Greenwood, Simpsonville, Spartanburg. All are haunted. So is Abbeville, and Rock Hill, and Newberry. And Anderson, Pickens, and Chester. And Iva, Pendleton, and Piedmont. It is hard to find a town that isn't. One Spartanburg County firehouse gets advance warnings from its ghost, while in Travelers Rest, just between Greenville and the mountains, you'll find a man who talks with ghosts almost daily. One has asked him to kill.

Scarier than the original, this collection will keep you awake at night. And like the man in Travelers Rest, it may even haunt you in your dreams.

John Boyanoski is a reporter for the Journal. He grew up hunting for ghosts with his cousins in the mountains of Pennsylvania.
